RESEARCH INTERESTS

Self-Regulation and Resource Depletion: From a limited resource model perspective, my research looks at how we manage our self-regulatory resources and what happens when those resources have been consumed.

Philosophical Psychology: My research looks at how one’s belief in free will (or lack thereof) affects one’s thoughts, feelings, intentions, and behaviors.

Scholarship of Teaching and Learning: Drawing on my two other research areas of interest, I look at how self-regulation and philosophical disposition predict academic achievement. Specifically, I am interested in how resistance to self-control depletion predicts outcomes like finals grades. I am also interested in the extent to which one’s trait belief in free will is a predictor of academic engagement.
